

United States Regulatory Agencies Unified Biotechnology Website

NBII Home

Welcome

Frequently Asked Questions

Database

Role of U.S. Agencies

Laws and Regulations

Government Contacts

Additional Sites

Capacity Building

Contact Us

Log In

Frequently Asked Questions

US Regulatory Process

Who is responsible for regulating agricultural biotechnology in the United States?

What authorities do the U.S. agencies use to review the genetically engineered agricultural products and how was this approach to regulation developed?

How do I know which agency reviews which product?

Are all agricultural products of modern biotechnology subject to review by all three agencies?

Database of Completed Regulatory Reviews

What kinds of products are included in the database?

How do I search the database?

What do the search results mean?

Are all the products listed in the database used in the United States?

Can you find a product by its tradename?

Will this database tell me whether a product is being used commercially in the United States?

Will a product appear on the database if it has not been evaluated by all relevant U.S. agencies?

Does the database provide information on product uses?

Does the database indicate whether a product has certain conditions or restrictions placed on its use?

This NBII web site was developed with support from the Agricultural Biotechnology Support Fund of the Department of State Bureau of Economic and Business Affairs. Continuing support for this website is provided by U.S. Department of Agriculture, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Food and Drug Administration and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

This NBII site is maintained and hosted by the Center for Biological Informatics of the U.S. Geological Survey

NBII Disclaimer and Privacy Statement | Accessibility

