

Discovery Bay-Brentwood Home & Community Blog

Chris Soukoulis Realtor @ Intero Real Estate Services 925-550-5028
chris@discoverybayhome.com

State begins spraying water weed

Posted on April 15, 2011 by Chris Soukoulis

Discovery Bay residents listen as Lucia Beccera of the California Department of Boating and Waterways outlines plans for the spraying of the egeria densa waterweed.

The California Department of Boating and Waterways (DBW) began spraying the waterways of Discovery Bay and Bethel Island this week in the first of a series of treatments designed to manage the prolific egeria densa waterweed.

“This is a huge step in controlling the problem and providing vital feedback for handling the issue in the future,” said CSD President Kevin Graves. “It’s great news.”

The tenacious weed first caught the attention of local homeowners and officials last year when a perfect storm of temperature, water and sunlight caused the fast-growing weed – most commonly found in pet stores and home aquariums – to expand its reach, clogging area bays and waterways up and down the Delta. But because treatment for the weed costs approximately $2,000 per acre and requires a state permit, the herbicide is unavailable to the public.

Last year, County Supervisor and Discovery Bay resident Mary Piepho began advocating that the state-run agency foot the bill for treating the egeria densa in Bethel Island and Discovery Bay. She hosted a series of meetings with the DBW, Reclamation District 800 and members of Discovery Bay’s CSD, and orchestrated two town hall meetings last weekend in Discovery Bay and Bethel Island.

“I’m glad I was able to bring everyone together and move this issue forward,” said Piepho. “This is really a Delta issue, not just a community issue ... We’ve received great help from federal, state and local government and we’re hoping this is a first step toward a longer course of treatment.”

According to Graves, “The Department of Boating and Waterways really stepped up and recognized the impact the egeria densa was having on the largest residential development located in the Delta. I want to thank Supervisor Mary Piepho for bringing together all the governmental agencies to accomplish what we were originally told would never happen.”

Spraying began this week on the 350 acres in Discovery Bay and approximately 100 acres in Bethel Island. Pellets filled with the non-toxic chemical fluridone are shot through a blower into the water and will continue to be administered once a week for eight to 12 weeks. Follow-up tests will be conducted daily to chart the effectiveness and safety of the treatment. Residents who see a stray pellet or two on their docks are advised to simply brush them into the water.

Because the herbicide is slow acting, residents won't be able to spot immediate and dramatic improvement. "It is critical to remember that it will take a few weeks to see any changes," said DBW Public Information Officer Gloria Sandoval. "And at that time, the tips of the weeds will begin to look pinkish or whitish. So we're really urging people to leave the weeds alone and give the treatment time to do its job."

So far, the DBW has committed to the program for only the current season.

"Treatment is just for this year, and based on the results, we'll see what happens in the future," said Sandoval. "Egeria densa has never been eradicated, but it can be controlled and it does react to treatment. We're hopeful it will be effective in the treated areas."

This entry was posted in Community Information, Real Estate Information and tagged American Dream, Blog, boating, Brentwood, Chris Soukoulis, Community, Contra Costa County, Discovery Bay, Fishing, Homeowners, homeownership, Information, Real Estate, real estate investment, water weed. Bookmark the permalink.

2 Responses to State begins spraying water weed

ciro sepulvda says:

May 7, 2011 at 9:04 am

Wanting know which areas in discovery bay have been sprayed. I live on south point and notice a lot of floating weeds and also a lot weeds under the surface. Very thick. Wanting to know if they should be remove, or should wait. Thank you

Reply

Chris Soukoulis says:

May 11, 2011 at 9:03 am

The ones to talk to regarding spraying are reclamation district 800 they can be reached at 925-634-2351

Reply

Discovery Bay-Brentwood Home & Community Blog

Proudly powered by WordPress.

112132

The forecast for 94505 by WP Wunderground